JANUARY MEETING FOLLOW-UP

1:15 P.M. WHERE THE WATER MEETS THE ROAD
Every time it rains, oil, dirt, and other pollutants are carried from rooftops and roads to local waterways. While stormwater is regulated under the federal Clean Water Act, it remains the fastest growing source of polluted runoff to the Chesapeake Bay and its tributaries, hampering our ability to meet our load reductions and restore our impaired waterways. What programs do our states have in place to control runoff from impervious surfaces? What can we learn from our neighbors?

Michelle Price-Fay
Director, Water Division
EPA Region 3

2:00 P.M. STORMWATER, LIKE POLITICS, IS LOCAL

When it comes to stormwater management, localities and municipalities may have regulatory responsibilities 1) managing their stormwater discharge systems or MS4s, 2) ensuring compliance by any industrial activities they operate, 3) approving sediment and erosion control plans for construction activities, and 4) enforcing post-construction stormwater management. How are localities rising to the challenge, what obstacles are they facing, and what opportunities are there for support and innovation?

Erik Michelson

Senior Environmental Policy Officer & Department of Public Works Deputy Director,
Bureau of Watershed Protection and Restoration
Anne Arundel County

3:30 P.M. STORMWATER MANAGEMENT TOUR

Over the last 200 years, Washington, D.C.'s Capitol Riverfront neighborhood has transformed from an industrial center for naval shipbuilding and ammunition production to a bustling entertainment district filled with a vibrant dining scene and three professional sports teams. In reconnecting the community to its riverfront, how has redevelopment prioritized stormwater management and green infrastructure in such a densely developed setting?

10:15 A.M. OF THE PEOPLE, BY THE PEOPLE, FOR THE PEOPLE

At the 2024 Chesapeake Executive Council Meeting, a recurrent theme was the need to center the people of the watershed in our conservation work. Last October, the Chesapeake Bay Foundation commissioned a poll of 2000 watershed residents. What do the survey results tell us about your constituents? What do people value when it comes to restoring the Chesapeake Bay and its watershed?

11:15 A.M. REFRESHING THE WATERSHED AGREEMENT

As directed by the Chesapeake Executive Council, the Bay Program is currently in the process of revising the 2014 Chesapeake Bay Watershed Agreement. So far, the Program and its partners have reviewed the current outcomes to determine whether to update, consolidate, replace, or remove them. Looking at the recommendations, what direction do you have for your Commission staff in refining the outcomes and putting the refreshed Agreement on the best path for success?
